The background of the poster features a dark silhouette of a group of people, likely workers, in a state of protest or celebration. Several individuals have their right fists raised high in the air, a common symbol of solidarity and resistance. Some people are holding flags, and the overall scene is dynamic and energetic. The silhouettes are set against a dark, textured background that blends into the orange color of the text.

At no previous point in its history has the situation of the labor movement been more dire. At the same time, new waves of immigrant and community organizing and the rise of middle-class activism may signal renewal for the movement that brought dignity to millions of workers. This event helps as look forward by first looking back on Peter's 4 decades of service to the labor movement.
